WOMEN DARE TO BARE IT

KIM WILSON

WE may still be shivering our way through winter but shoulders are already coming out to reveal one of the hottest trends for spring and summer.

The off-the-shoulder look in tops and dresses, which references the popular '70s vibe, is a trans-seasonal trend that suits women of almost all body shapes and sizes.

Highpoint stylist Sarah Singer says the off-the-shoulder look is versatile and practical.

"It's a good trans-seasonal trend to take you from the end of winter through to summer," she said.

"You can wear it pulled up or pushed down, with a jacket or without. The style of top means you can decrease the coverage as it gets warmer."

She said depending on the style of the top, the off-the-shoulder trend can take you from the office to evening, or as the weather warms up from the beach to the bar.

"We've shown a very casual weekend look right up to the office or a more sophisticated look," Ms Singer said.
